Georgia, and abide to election laws and internationally recognize standards of democracy by election administration, election entities and public servants during the pre-election period. It also aims at updating Georgian citizens and international community about any violations and flaws detected in the run-up to elections.

GYLA's observers generally focus on composition of election administrations, vote buying, abuse of state resources, threats and intimidation of political unions/election entities and their representatives, as well as persecutions and dismissals from work on alleged political basis.

GYLA is carrying out the pre-election monitoring for the upcoming 2013 presidential elections with the financial support from the National Endowment for Democracy (NED).
